THE STORY BEHIND THE EISENHOWER REPORT

by

W. W. CHAPLIN

Commentator, National Broadcasting Company

* * *

From the moment he left on his now-famous tour of Western Europe until he took off again for the U.S., General Dwight D. Eisenhower was accompanied by Past President W. W. CHAPLIN, top-notch NBC news commentator. During the Supreme Allied Commander's three-week inspection trip to 12 European capitals, CHAPLIN covered virtually every move he made. His on-the-spot broadcasts were heard at least daily by millions of Americans.

Now Past President CHAPLIN presents the background, the inside facts behind the Eisenhower report in a dramatic narrative based on his own intimate observations.

CLUB MOVES TO PROVE BACKGROUND

OF PROPOSED U.N. INFORMATION PACT

...Roundtable Speakers to Present Reasons for U.S.

Objections to Document Regulating Press ...

With scheduling of a special Roundtable Discussion at the Clubrooms Friday on "New Threats to Press Freedom", the Overseas Press Club this week began a fact-finding probe into the background of the proposed United Nations global treaty on information. The draft, now being submitted to UN member-governments for comment, was supported by 13 delegates of the 15-nation committee. It was rejected outright by both the U.S. and the Soviet Union.

President LOUIS P. LOCHNER said the Club's Committee on Freedom of Press and Information is studying the UN document and may present recommendations for positive action following Friday's Roundtable. And Program Committee Chairman SANFORD GRIFFITH promised that a full-scale review of the facts by State Department members and newsmen would highlight the meeting.

Main U.S. objection to the proposed Convention on Freedom of Information centers about the controversial Article 2, which outlines restrictions that would be permitted on press, radio and other media. U.S. Representative Carroll Binder, editorial page editor of the Minneapolis Star and Tribune, cited paragraphs which would bar news considered "dangerous for youth" or "disclosure of information received in confidence". He said these limitations constituted an open invitation to governments to ban a wide variety of news topics.

Two added limits which a separate committee decision may incorporate in the document also were attacked by Binder. One would ban "false and distorted reports likely to undermine friendly relations"; the other would kill "information likely to injure the feelings of nationals of a state". Both provisions would give the green light to efforts by any Government to curb press freedom Binder asserted.

Commenting editorially on the latter proposal, the New York Times last week declared that "if news 'likely to injure the feelings of nationals of a state' had been established as a criterion, not a true word could have been published in the American press regarding the whole record of the Hitler Government in Germany. Not a word could now be published about the Stalin Government in Moscow, the Franco Government in Spain, the Mao Government in China...As for the question of 'false and distorted reports,' who is to decide what is false and what is distorted? Is an estimate of 10,000,000 prisoners in Soviet slave camps a 'false and distorted' estimate? Who knows, when the Soviets invoke their iron censorship?"
